Cookies

Cookies When you visit a website the site can use the web browser to place a cookie on the computer of the website visitor. A cookie is a small text file which is used to store information. If the user visits the site again later, the website can read the data of the previously stored cookie and so determine, for example, whether the user has visited the site before, and in which areas of the website the user is particularly interested. The legal basis for the use of cookies comes from the Trade Regulation Act 1994, the Telecommunications Act 2003, and the Data Protection Act 2000. Find more information about cookies on Wikipedia:

Changing Cookies Settings

It is possible to define how the web browser handles cookies in the web browser settings, particularly as to which cookies are allowed or denied. Where exactly these settings can be found depends on the web browser. Detailed information can be found using the help function of your web browser. If the use of cookies is limited, full functionality of our website is no longer possible under certain circumstances.

Google Analytics

Google Analytics This website uses Google Analytics, a web analytics service of Google Inc. (“Google”). Google Analytics uses cookies to store information about the website user and to analyse the use of the website by the website user.

The information generated by the cookies about the use of this website (including the website user's IP address) is transmitted to a Google server in the US and stored there. According to Google, this information is used by Google to evaluate the use of the website in order to compile reports on website activity and provide other services relating to use of the website and internet use.

Google may also transfer this information to third parties where this is required by law or where such third parties process the information on Google's behalf.

Social Plugins

Our website uses several plugins from third parties.

When accessing our site, a connection is made via these plugins to the servers of the respective plugin providers and data is transmitted. It is unknown exactly which data the plugin providers transfer and how that information is processed by the plugin providers. If the site users have a user account with this plugin provider, the plugin provider can associate the information transmitted directly with their account. Website users can avoid this association under certain circumstances by logging out of their respective user accounts before they visit our website.
